CouponMeUp have thousands of the best coupons from hundreds of online .An interview from Boy Genius Report in which Stargirl Creative Director Alan Moore says that DC Animation has yet to make Green Lantern: The Animated Series official, and it's going to be a while before it does. Moore made this comment around the same time that TNT delayed the animated series. The gap between DC Animation's Green Lantern: The Animated Series and its January 2012 release is so large that fans have to speculate on the thing's status. A source told Comic Book Resources in February that the series was canceled because of its weak pilot script. However, "it hasn't been officially canceled," according to IGN. No further information on the delayed project has been provided. Still, a January 25, 2012, article from Boy Genius Report reports Moore's comments about the series' status in the TV industry. "We're still waiting to hear," Moore said, "which is where we've been for about eight months now." The Green Lantern franchise has been handled by Warner Bros. Animation for the past four years. The main characters are Hal Jordan, John Stewart and Guy Gardner, and they fly their Lanterns around. An interviewer was wondering if DC is looking to use some of its other properties. "It's been very carefully considered," Moore responded, "because they've got an insanely voluminous line-up of very diverse properties to draw on."
