The plaintiff is not entitled to damages unless he can demonstrate to the court that the defendant is liable. Such liability requires more than a finding that the defendant's conduct was improper; the plaintiff must establish that the defendant's improper conduct injured the plaintiff. Lasky, et al v. CBS, Inc., et al, et al No. 93 Civ. 7414 (CSH) (S.D.N.Y. June 17, 1996) The following is an excerpt from a very helpful discussion of Judge Sweet's decision concerning the misrepresentations made by the defendant in the above captioned action: Judge Sweet's decision is a thorough and thoughtful examination of the doctrine of unjust enrichment as adopted in New York. The court determines that unjust enrichment is not applicable under the facts of this case. The elements of unjust enrichment are: "1) that plaintiff conferred a benefit upon the defendant; 2) that defendant knew of plaintiff's benefit; 3) that defendant accepted and retained the benefit conferred; 4) that the circumstances are such that it would be inequitable for the defendant to retain the benefit without payment of the value thereof." * * * * * The court believes that the facts of this case do not support the application of unjust enrichment to the plaintiff's claims. The reasoning 6d1f23a050
